Brent crude traded below $96 a barrel, largely holding on to its 3.3% gain from Thursday as President Donald Trump said the US could forgo a deal with Iran. South Africa 'Manufacturing penalty' hurts investment, BASF says. South Africa has unintentionally created a "manufacturing penalty" that disadvantages companies producing goods locally and risks further hollowing out its industrial base, according to the local chief of BASF SE, Europe's biggest chemicals producer. Multinationals that make goods in the continent's biggest economy commit substantial fixed capital, shoulder local operating and logistics risks and train skilled workers, while importers "backed by massive overcapacities" ship finished goods through ports and can bypass many of those costs, BASF South Africa Chief Executive Officer Wojciech Kulma said. Over last three decades, South Africa's share in the continent's gross domestic product has halved to 14% while its manufacturing sector has shrunk to about 12% of GDP, with local chemical production at a record low, he said.
